

Revealing the truth about south-west's violent past

Carol Altmann – The Terrier

I want to pass this on. This map is so confronting but so necessary to examine.

It is a map generated by The Guardian as part of a major project it launched today – The Killing Times – showing massacre sites from the colonisation of Australia until 1928. You can see that south-west Victoria, our home, was a bloodbath.

I learned nothing of this when I was at school. I had never heard of the mass killings of Aboriginal people at places like Crawford River, Murderers Flat, Connells Ford, Apsley, Tarrone, Eumerella, Lake Bolac, Wannon River...

The Guardian, in its forensic analysis of this history, wants to help change that.

It hopes this project will be part of a new way of looking at our past, to finally confront a truth that “has long been hiding in plain sight”, so that the healing of our nation’s heart can begin.
